1. Opening of the Symposium

1.1 Opening Remarks

- [1] Mr. Jingyuan XIA, the Secretary of the International Plant Protection Convention (IPPC) opened the session by welcoming all participants to China and to the first High Level Symposium under the China “One Road One Belt Initiative” (OBOR). He further welcomed the representatives from the different Chinese phytosanitary ministries, agencies, departments, and industries. The IPPC Secretary Xia indicated that the IPPC is implementing the IPPC China South-South Cooperation (SSC) project amounting to USD 2 million for 4 years (2017-2020). He noted that two High Level Symposia will be organized with the support of the IPPC China project: the first one for the Chinese “One Road” initiative including countries mainly from Asia, the Pacific, the Caribbean and Latin America; and the second one for the Chinese “One Belt” initiative including countries mainly from Central Asia, Eastern Europe, the Near East and Africa.

The IPPC Secretary outlined the three main objectives for this Symposium: 1) to facilitate the exchange of information at the global, regional and national levels; 2) to engage in discussions on areas of possible cooperation; and (3) to encourage active participation among all participants.

[15] Mr Op PICH from Cambodia, Ms Azhar KAJIBEKOVA from Kazakhstan, Mr Dilli Ram SHARMA from Nepal, Ms Lilani Champika HEWAGE from Sri Lanka, Mr Prateep ARAYAKITTIPONG from Thailand, Ms Sanniel WILSON from Jamaica, Mr Ezequiel FERRO from Argentina, Mr Álvaro Sepúlveda LUQUE from Chile, Mr Javier Jaison Layme MANCHEGO from Peru, Ms Magda GONZALEZ from Costa Rica, Mr Nitesh DATT from Fiji, Ms Nafanua Jolan Ebony LUSEANE from Samoa, Mr Graham MALAÉFOÓU from Tonga, Mr Camilo Beltran MONTOYA from Comunidad Andina (CAN), Ms Juliet Velmarie GOLDSMITH from the Caribbean Agricultural Health and Food Safety Agency (CAHFSA), and Mr Visoni TIMOTE from the Pacific Plant Protection Organization (PPPO) respectively gave national and regional reports on their phytosanitary systems. They provided their country profile and information on their phytosanitary system, emerging issues and possible areas for cooperation with China, other “One Road” countries and the IPPC Secretariat.

[16] Several cross-cutting issues emerged such as the need for more capacity development. Several pests such as fruit flies, citrus greening disease and fall armyworm were also of common concern for the “One Road and One Belt” countries. Opportunity and challenges were identified in the following areas: sharing of knowledge, exchange of information and access to markets.

9. Panel Discussion

[17] All participants actively engaged in discussions on opportunities for collaboration; improving the Symposium; and follow-up activities to the Symposium.

9.1 Opportunities for Collaboration

[18] Participants were eager to establish a mechanism for cooperation among “One Road and One Belt” countries, including through the signature of an MOA with China. They proposed several areas of cooperation as follows:

[19] Technical areas of cooperation:

- Discussions to improve the understanding of some ISPMs could be held at the regional level - in particular for the implementation of ISPMs with a specific reference to ISPM 11; or related to pest free areas, systems approaches, phytosanitary treatments and the recognition of equivalence and harmonization.
- Development of a strategy to regionally or globally forecast emerging pests and undertake rapid response.
- Cooperation for the implementation of ePhyto and a single window to facilitate trade.
- Implementation of regional projects in facilitating trade and gaining market access.

[20] Phytosanitary capacity development activities:

- Professional exchange of knowledge, skills, technology and innovation.
- Capacity building and research exchange programmes in the area of diagnostics.
- Scholarships and opportunities for “One Road and One Belt” country participants to study plant protection and quarantine in academic institutes in China.

[21] Infrastructure and material needs:

- Developing infrastructure to increase trade connectivity.
- Sharing new technologies, particularly on surveillance.

- Promoting research collaboration among continents that have common areas of research (e.g. on citrus huanglongbing (HLB) using the same model as the European Phytosanitary Research Coordination (EUPHRESKO).

9.2 Suggestions for the Next Symposium

[22] The participants expressed their great appreciation for the organization and content of the Symposium and made the following suggestions for improving it:

- Share contact details of Chinese companies with participants and make them available in English in the report.
- Organize additional side events that include Chinese industries proposing innovative technologies.
- Create an evaluation survey of the Symposium and send the link to participants.
- Establish parameters for measuring project results.
- The symposium should be attended by officials that can commit themselves to these projects.
- Invite academic institutions that share common interests and do research on pests.

9.3 Follow-up Actions to the Symposium

[23] The participants recommended follow-up actions including:

- Develop a draft road map to include strategies, sustainability components and parameters for the success of the project.
- Provide a summary page to be distributed to contracting parties on China's "One Road One Belt" initiative.
- Summarize all the information which was shared during the Symposium.
- Prioritize and validate the "One Road" countries' needs.
- Share success stories on how to improve engagement with limited resources.
- Share technical expertise for countries with similar situations.

10. Concluding Remarks

[24] The IPPC Secretary concluded by noting the successful, fruitful and memorable hosting of the First High Level Symposium under the "One Road One Belt" initiative. Several major achievements were accomplished. These included the increased awareness of the China initiative by "One Road" countries, the FAO-China South-South Cooperation Programme and the IPPC related project; greater knowledge of China's phytosanitary system; a strong interest from all attendants to foster cooperation through the "One Road One Belt" initiative; and valuable recommendations for increasing international cooperation.

[25] From the discussions held, the IPPC Secretary made the following suggestions:

1. Make information on Chinese industries available in English (consider providing a one page summary);
2. Analyse and publish all information provided during the Symposium and follow up on suggested activities;
3. Create a dedicated webpage for the Symposium and the IPPC China South-South Cooperation project;
4. Develop concept notes, a framework and plan on how to improve cooperation with China;

5. Prioritize cooperation on key issues (targeted pests) and areas (technology or knowledge-oriented areas of work such as ePhyto; or capacity development needs);
6. Organize two advanced trainings on phytosanitary measures to be attended by high-level staff;
7. Organize a pilot site in Sri Lanka and Kazakhstan to carry out a Phytosanitary Capacity Evaluation (PCE) and select a field location to demonstrate Chinese technologies. This pilot site model could be reproduced in other countries;
8. Set up infrastructure projects to be supported by China (e.g. laboratory, IT);
9. Determine a coordination mechanism and establish a focus group to follow up on activities. These should involve the IPPC Secretariat, RPPOs, NPPOs and China;
10. Increase communication and advocacy activities to improve the visibility and impact of the current IPPC project.

[26] The IPPC Secretary encouraged the RPPOs to continue sharing and exchanging experiences and undertaking coordination activities in their region. NPPOs were also invited to provide reports on OBOR to their management and governments.

[27] The IPPC Secretary invited China to establish frequent contacts with CPs and to actively advocate for phytosanitary aspects to be included in international cooperation.

[28] The IPPC Secretary finally thanked everyone for the rich content of the event. He acknowledged the efforts of National Agro-tech Extension and Service Center (NATESC) and of the Guangxi authority for the excellent organization.
